

I strongly appose increasing the amount of a given market that a media company can own. Undermining regulations formerly in place is not only opening the door to the dark ages of news coverage, but it also poses one of the biggest threats to our country insofar as the electorate will be informed by many fewer news sources. As a democracy, we thrive on the heterogeny of news. Did anybody ever bother to read 1984? I know you will likely disregard the will of the people on this issue, but at least I have made my point known.

Sincerely,

Bradley T. Barcom
